

Final Project Description and Rubric

The final project can be developed in groups of up to six students. The individuals forming a group will be referred to as the “Team” from now on. The Team should choose a problem/topic of interest and try to solve it using image processing and/or deep learning methods similar or related to the ones described in class. The problem/topic of interest should represent a scientific challenge. It is recommended that the project involves the processing of images, but other applications will be accepted if related to the techniques learned in class. Ideally, the problem/topic of the project will align with the research interests of the Team. There are two components to the final project:

- Project report (70% of project grade)
- Project presentation (30% of project grade)

Project Report

Report Format

The project should be written using one of the template provided in the course GitHub page: <https://github.com/rmsouza01/deep-learning>. The report is limited to up to 6 pages of technical content including figures and tables with one additional seventh page that may contain only references.

Elements that need to be in the report:

The report should contain the following information:

- Detail the motivation and significance of the problem being approached.
- Include relevant references (well cited, high impact factor journals, etc.).
- Describe and discuss the final methodology employed by the team to solve the problem.
- Present and discuss the results achieved by the team.
- Discuss strengths and limitations of the proposed methodology.

The final report should have the link to a GitHub repository with the code developed by the team during the project. The recommended sections’ structure of the project is:

- Abstract
- Introduction
- Related Work
- Materials and Methods
- Results and Discussion
- Conclusions
- References

The project report should be delivered by the deadline established in class. The reports are graded by team and not by team member.

Project Presentation

The final presentation has two components: a comprehensive 10-minute presentation that should be recorded and delivered with the report on the Team’s dropbox on D2L. The 10-minute presentation should touch on all points that are described in the final report. All team members should speak during the presentation in a balanced manner. The second component of the final project is a 5-minute in-person summary presentation followed by five minutes for questions. These 5-minute summary presentation dates will be defined in class. The final presentations will be graded per student.

Final Project Rubric

Each of the components of the final project (report and presentation) will be given a score between 0 and 100 and will be weighted accordingly to obtain the final grade.
